GARDEN SUBURB FREE CHURCH

Opening of New School Buildings on September 26th by Mr. J. H. Whitley, M.P.

The visit of the Right Hon. J. H. Whitley, M.P., the Speaker of the House of Commons, on Saturday, September 5th, to open the Garden Suburb Free Church hall and school buildings, is being looked forward to with great interest. The completion of the work is being closely followed, and we are convinced that when the place is ready for occupation it will be found admirably adapted for the purposes it has to serve.

The proceedings on September 26th will open in the Free Church, when the Rev. W. Major Scott, M.A., the minister, and his predecessor, Dr. J. H. Rushbrooke, M.A., now vice-president of the Baptist Union of Great Britain and Ireland, will take the service. Then will follow a procession to the new buildings, singing the hymn "Now thank we all our God." To Mr. Whitley will be presented a silver key, with which he will open the doors of the new buildings, and he will afterwards give an address.

On the following day, at 3 o'clock, there will be an inaugural service, at which Miss Kathleen Denham, of Peuge Congregational Church, will speak, and on Monday, September 28th, something in the nature of a "house-warming" has been arranged.

The Sunday School is graded into departments to meet the developing needs of boys and girls of five years of age and upwards, and the leaders will be pleased to welcome boys and girls any Sunday afternoon before 3 o'clock.

THE DOGS' REFORM CLUB.

HAVE DOGS RIGHTS?

[REPORTED BY CANIS MAJOR.]

The club met at Grassy Patch last week. Bully-boy, the well-known prize-winning bulldog, presided.

"Now, gentlemen," said the chairman, "there has been talk in the public Press about dogs. I hear that a certain judge has declared that dogs have no rights on the highway. Our friend Mac, of Eight-pence, lives in the house of a lawyer, and we naturally turn to him for light and learning."

The Scottish terrier scratched his ear, then said cautiously, "I'm believed dog of a man learned in law. I cost him quite a deal of silver for the best of all foods." Mac then sat down abruptly.

"In the name of St. Patrick himself and is that all you have to say for yourself?" inquired Pat, the Irish terrier, "I could make a finer speech than that at me own funeral, so I could."

"Silence! I will not allow these personalities," said the chairman sternly. "No doubt our friend Mac would like to add to his remarks."

"I was just thinking," said Mac cautiously, "that if lawyers' advice is given free they cannot buy those dog biscuits, hound and terrier meals which nourish, please, and satisfy us."

"Perfectly true," remarked the chairman. "Yet, while appreciating Mac's fidelity to his master's interests, I hazard that his master, being a dog lover (as witness the excellent appearance of Mac), would be pleased to think that his opinion was to prove of value to dogs by being revealed to the club. I therefore appeal to Mac to tell us what his eminent master thinks."

The large brown eyes of Mac grew tender at this reference to his master's legal eminence, and he again spoke.

"I must yield to your persuasion and, after all, I think it only right that his opinion should be published. We have always enjoyed the right to use the highways of Britain. (Applause.) Men, women and children have a right to use the roads, and so have dogs. This is a good law, and I am a believer in good law.

"And good biscuits!" interjected Pat.

"Just so," continued Mac. "Sound law and sound hard biscuit foods never hurt an honest dog. We have a right to use the roads and most drivers recognise our claim. If a driver has just quarrelled with his wife there is no need to make orphans of our puppies. My master finds that a dog has a right to pass and repass on the roadways and to stop for a few seconds if he needs to do so. That is the law and I stand up for my rights as a freeborn British dog."

"But the devil a use it is to have any rights in concrete fact," argued Pat.

Mac stretched his ear again.

"That is our weakness," he conceded. "And also our strength, for it has always been a good British principle to show consideration to the weak. A motor-car is strong —12-horse power against 1-dog power—we have neither time nor strength to argue with it on equal terms. Therefore I propose that the club petitions all drivers of motors to give us a chance to use the roads, and not to use their speed unduly against us."

All the dogs cheered this suggestion, and a small committee was elected to draw up the petition.

DEATH OF MRS. HARMSWORTH.

Honoured and Respected Resident of Totteridge for Many Years.

IMPRESSIVE FUNERAL AT FINCHLEY.

Totteridge has lost one of its most honoured and respected residents by the death of Mrs. Harmsworth, of Poynters Hall, which occurred on Saturday night at the age of 85. The whole country learned with regret of the passing of this remarkable lady, and messages of sympathy poured into the Hall, where her family were assembled when the end came.

Loved by none was Mrs. Harmsworth more than by the villagers, and by her 28 years' residence among them had become an integral part of the little community. During the latter part of her lifetime she was frequently to be seen out in her bath chair, one of her favourite journeys being along the road as far as Dansom-hill, while at times she would rest on the green opposite the Hall.

A LOVE FOR TOTTERIDGE.

Mrs. Harmsworth loved Totteridge for its country charm, and its situation within easy reach of London, and was familiar with every road and lane for 20 miles round. On Sundays when her health permitted she attended the Parish Church, and up till quite recently was in the habit of arriving after the morning service in time for the mid-day celebration of the Holy Communion. Her presence in the little church was always welcomed, and she was indeed one of its most valued members, being ever ready to lend practical support to anything although all her benefactions were given unostentatiously.

In the vast domains of Poynters Hall—a particularly attractive specimen of an ancient mansion probably built in the time of Queen Anne—she led a life of quiet retirement, never intruding herself into public matters, but always taking the keenest interest in passing events. A typical example of the serious note with which she regarded her duty as a citizen is to be found in the fact that despite her great age she insisted on recording her vote at a quite recent election, and was taken by motor car to the polling station at Totteridge School. Beloved by her servants, and esteemed by all who had the privilege of her acquaintance, she will long be remembered as a lady who exerted a formidable influence for the greatest good, and it is peculiarly consoling to her relatives that she died in perfect peace with those dearest to her heart around her.

In the wider sphere of national life, the late Mrs. Harmsworth was better known as the mother of Mr. Alfred Harmsworth, barrister-at-law, and mother of a distinguished family. Her eldest son, Viscount Northcliffe, predeceased her three years ago, but she is survived by seven sons—Viscount Rothermere, Mr. Cecil Harmsworth (for some years Parliamentary Secretary for Foreign Affairs), Sir Alfred Harmsworth, Bt., Mr. St. John Harmsworth, Mr. Edmond Harmsworth, Mr. Vyvyan Harmsworth—and by three daughters, Lady King, Mrs. Wild, and Mrs. Burton.

The eldest surviving son, Viscount Rothermere, was 26 when she married Mr. Alfred Harmsworth, then a master on the staff of the Royal Hibernian School, Dublin. Her husband died in 1889 at the age of 32, and thirty-five years later Mrs. Harmsworth and her surviving son, Viscount Rothermere, gave £50,000 to the Middle Temple for a chambers, and a benevolent endowment to be known as the "Alfred Harmsworth Memorial Fund." Her family life was typified by a deep and natural affection, and she loved nothing better than to have her sons and daughters with her at her home.

It is recorded that Viscount Northcliffe, during his journalistic prosperity, frequently sought her advice, regarding her as a most valuable guide and counsellor.

A native of Ireland, she had the greatest sympathy with the Ulster people, and up till quite recently her health permitted followed with the keenest interest the latest developments in Irish affairs. She rarely travels of an extensive kind, other than those in Europe, were visits she paid with Lord Northcliffe to the United States and Canada, during which she lunched at the Whitehouse and at the White House with President Roosevelt at the White House in Washington. Her home was frequently the scene of family parties and important gatherings, one of her regular visitors being Sir Thomas Lipton, a very old friend, who always dined with her on New Year's Day. In addition to her private charities, she endowed a bed in the London Hospital and also a Dublin hospital in memory of Lord Northcliffe.

Some twelve years ago the Hall was extensively damaged by fire, but the ruined portion was restored, as nearly as possible to its former condition, particular care being taken to keep to the original design.

At Tuesday's meeting of the Barnet Council a vote of condolence was passed with Mrs. O. Burton, one of the Totteridge members, on the death of her mother.

THE FUNERAL.

Memorable scenes were witnessed at the funeral, which took place on Wednesday morning. The hearse, followed by two special coaches filled with flowers, and nearly thirty cars containing the mourners, filed from Poynters Hall to St. Andrew's Church, Totteridge, where a brief and simple service was conducted by the Rev. C. W. McLaughlin, the Rev. Lord Northcliffe to the United States and Canada, during which she lunched at the Whitehouse and at the White House with President Roosevelt at the White House in Washington. Her home was frequently the scene of family parties and important gatherings, one of her regular visitors,
