VALENCIENNES, OCTOBER 31, 1783.

THE brave VIRAY and OTTO have completely routed a corps of the Carmagnols at Marchiennes, one o'clock this morning. They were three thousand men frong, and not a foul escaped. They lost all their cannon, baggage, ammunition, hortes, &c. &c. I arrived this moment from St. Amand, where I have feen our Hussia fell forty-two excellent bullocks at two or three louis-d'ors piece; artillery horses were fold nearly at the same price. The Commander of this corps is faid to have been absent at Douai when the Attack was made. I do not as yet know his name; but we shall soon find it in the black carbalogue of the Conciergerie. The prisoners, about 2000 in number, are all in the most wretched condition, except small detachment of the Dragonns of the Scaffful direction, and the control of the Scafful direction, and the control of the scafful direction, and the control of the scafful direction, and the scafful direction and the scafful direction

LONDON, NOVEMBER 8, 1793.

The Flanders and Dutch Mails due this morning, had not come in when the Evening Papers went to Prefs, nor had any Mcssegrarrived from the Army; but by a Gentleman who arrived in Town yesterday morning from the Duke of York's Camp, which he left on Sunday last, we learn that His Royal Highness had moved his Head Quarters to Cifoing.

The Prince of Saxe-Cobourg had likewife shifted his Head Quarters, with a view of drawing out the French to a General Action, if this can possibly be done.
