LONDON, November 5.

THE French official details of the late events in Germany have arrived since our last—The Bulletin from Boulogne has been confirmed—Ulm has capitulated—General Mack has been taken prisoner, and his army has been annihilated.

We proceed to an analysis of the intelligence contained in the French papers of the 25th ult., and Dutch to the 2d inst.

The late Bulletin, before the arrival of the papers, brought down the operations of the campaign to the 1st inst. General Mack had then taken up a position at Ulm. Buonaparte's great object was to force the Austrians to evacuate the right Bank of the Danube, and concentrate themselves on the left bank.

While the divisions under Marbot, Ney, and Lannes pushed closer towards Ulm, Marshal Soult marched against the Austrian left wing at Memmingen. He arrived before the town on the 14th, inferior in number to the Austrians, but by a skilful manoeuvre he compelled them to evacuate the town, and the garrison, consisting of nine battalions and ten pieces of cannon, surrendered.

Immediately pushed on to Biberach and Ochsenhausen, and on the 17th he was at Biberach. He reached Biberach on the morning of the 17th. Meanwhile General Mack endeavoured to clear the enemy from the environs of Ulm.

On the 18th a forlorn hope of 2000 Austrians, under the command of General Biberach, was sent to the Danube—six thousand French, according to the French accounts, successfully repulsed 20,000 Austrians, and took 1500 prisoners.

Ulm was invested by the Austrians on the 19th. Marshal Ney closed more upon Ulm, and on the 20th he had reached the bridge over the Danube, attacked the position of Elchingen, a little above Ulm. A very warm battle took place, but the Austrians, under General Biberach, were at length obliged to fall back to the entrenchments of Ulm, with the loss of 3000 men taken prisoners.

Lannes' division, at the same time, occupied the heights which command the town of Ulm. He pushed himself at the bridge of Unterkirch and Oberkirch, at the confluence of the Ilr with the Danube. It seems, on the 14th, to have been defeated by the Austrians, and the remainder of the army should remain in and occupy the attention of the enemy at Ulm, the remainder, and probably the greater part, under Prince Ferdinand, should attempt to effect its escape by the Danube.

On the 12th, he marched towards Biberach—right as he was, he soon abandoned his intention of attempting his retreat that way. The fifth British Division, that instead of proceeding towards Biberach, he took a northerly course to Aalen. Ulm is the central point where several roads meet.

The French Bulletin states, that Buonaparte had placed the army of Prince Ferdinand at Aalen, and had ordered it to march to the Danube. He had formed the plan of making his divisions retreat by their roads, to re-assemble them in Bohemia near the Tyrol.

CAPITULATION OF ULM.

Occupied by the Troops of his Majesty the Emperor of Austria and the King of Prussia, in the Army of his Majesty the Emperor of Austria.

We, Alex. Bermany, Marshal of the Empire, and Field-Marshal Baron Mack, &c. have agreed upon the following articles:—

The Sybillic frigate goes out to Cuxhaven immediately with dollars to the amount of 300,000 sterling. An invoice was done on Friday...

We are shocked to find in the Gazette de France an account of the death of the unfortunate Capt. Wright. The article is as follows:—

From Vienna to Munich there are three roads, the two principal of which, at this juncture, are those by Regau and by Salzburg. From Vienna to Regau the distance is 105 English miles; from Vienna to Brunnau on the Inn, the distance is 105 miles; from Regau to Munich 85; from Inns to Salzburg the distance is 105 miles.

We have been favoured with an interesting communication respecting the distances of the different places at and near the seat of war, which may serve to illustrate the relative situation of the armies:—

Orders were on Thursday received at the Cavalry Barracks, at Ipswich, for keeping the horses as cool as possible, with a view to the horsemanship to be shown by the severity of a Winter's campaign.

Yesterday the Seilians at the Old Bailey ended at five o'clock in the evening, when Elizabeth Wilson, for being at a dwelling house; Solomon Wilson, for being at a dwelling house; and Peter Wilson, for being at a dwelling house, received sentences of imprisonment.

The impertinent attack in the office of Bread, during the last week, exceeded 36,000 quarters; during the last week, it was 36,000 quarters; during the last week, it was 36,000 quarters.

The supply of oats from the Continent during the last week has been unusually great. By the Custom House return, it appears that 118,000 quarters have been imported from the Continent during the last week.
