SUMMARY OF POLITICS.

SUMMARY OF POLITICS.

The nuture of the negotiation can only be athibated to the rapacity and ambition of Buonapate. While we were negotiating, with a view to the scentry and independence of Europe, the Prench quarter and object of our policy. In the most of the negotiation the fluctuation of the thine with the prench of the destruction of the Germanic condition; and lest three should be any counterpoint to brench domination, a counteracting federation in the north was opposed, further ecsients were demanded, and further apolisations were anounced. The value of peace consists in its secunity, and those who have been most studious to preserve peace with france, must best know how little secrity there can be in peace with the present Fench government. Our object in any peace we have proposed to make, is not so much our own rights, which cannot be infringed; or our own independence, which cannot be invaded or diminished; as the security; the right, and the independence of the countries which are open and accessible to violence and aggression, and which can from no ther source derive so satisfactory and complete a protection as our guarantee would afford them. The nations of Europe must clearly see that we negotiate as we fight, not only for ourselves, the futhers; and as any of them are capable of making an effort for the vindication of their last maintain grights, they will bring it in aid of the power and bravery which, by so many recent vicines and conquests, has shewed itself capable not only of contending single-handed with France, but after exposing its menaces of invasion to universal risk cannot be proved that haughty country and its insolent tyrant.

The Butch papers contain a long letter from king leas, respecting the seauchest as the security of the finances.

pide and reduce the power of that haughty country and its insolent tyrant.

The Dutch papers contain a long letter from long lower, respecting the scantiness of the finances, and the accessity of making great sacrifices at this sacrifices. It is certainly a more rational appeal to the people of that country than we should have extended to find in an address, the substance of which was most likely prepared in the French cabinet. The ebject of it was, to prevail on the states to suntion the anticipation of the annual recenture as settled last summer. In this answer, tievy admit the extreme necessity of the case, and enforce it by an additional argument drawn from the probability of an invasion of the country. Notwithstanding the support which the states are inclined give this extraordinary project for providing the means of putting the army in motion, they candid-tenders their doubts of its complete success—"I way, therefore, we think, assert, without the impattion of rashness, that Louis (and particularly life the of victory be set against France) will not, during the continuance of the war, be again able brais as much money in Holland, without having course to some of the colious means he so justly sonderns.

TAMILY OF PAIM, OF NURFMERG.

The public scourge of Europe has added to his former atroctice by the watton murder of Palm the Bookselle of Nuremberg—a mun who certainly outed no allegiance to the Unityper of France, who was guilty of no crime, but what every Englishman would glory in committing against such a detenthle tyrunt, and whose magnanisty in publishing to military execution rather than betray his author, entitles his memory to the respect, and his original family to the protection of every friend of virtue and humanity, throughout the civilized world.

It is now impossible to reitore a father to his children or a hubband to his widow; but the warmer-pression of sympathy may assist to southe their hearts—the hand of liberal charity may pour bain into the womand, at the same time that they estince a detestation of the tyrant, and a generous resolution to expose or withstand his sanguinary unbition to the last extremity.

On those principles a Soboription has been opposed in different parts of the kingdom for the relief of the family of the deceased; and never was there a cours in which Britons angle more cordially to mite. On Saturday evening last, as Mr. Win. Floyd, of this city, was returning from angling, in company with his fallor, he attempted to keap over a ditch, when he unfortunately broke his leg.

The driver of one of the day coaches met with an unfortunate accident on Monday last, in passing through Woodbook. The caach leaning too nuch on one side, and fearing it might be overturned, he leaped off, and broke his leg; while a shiller who followed his example escened without injury. On Toesday and Wednesday the 21 battainn of the 33d Regiment of Foot passed through this city on their rout from Chippany Norton to some part of the country of Kent. And on Thursday a division of the 17th Light Dragoons marched in from Wallingford, on their rout to Northampton Barracks. On Wednesday evening last a numerous and most respectable meeting was held at the house of Mr. R. Haines, in St. Ebbs, in this City, of the admirers of that illustrious Statesman Mr. Fox. The chair was taken at 7 o'clock, by a gentleman who at a former meeting to celebrate his return to offichal presided, and who in personal appearance bears a strong resemblance to that great man. A very appropriate and pathetic culopium was given from the chair, and many toasts drank expressive of their admiration of his character and their deep regret for his loss.
