LONDON, November 14.

PARIS papers to the 7th, and Dutch to the 11th, have arrived, and bring us the regular series of the bulletins of the French Grand Army to the 21st, dated from Berlin the 28th of October. The greater part of these official bulletins are employed, not in communicating the events of the war, but in long and pompous commentaries on the politics of Prussia. Prussia had no cause for war, and that she had been precipitated into her present situation by the greedy lust of the 14th Prince Hohenzollern. He retreated to Magdeburg, when he attempted to effect his escape to the West. He took the road from Rathnow, and was between that place and Ruppun on the 25th. The French, immediately upon their entering Berlin, had pushed forward a column of their troops, which, ascending by the way to the heights of Zedhenich, on the 26th, Mura, with his cavalry, attacked the advanced guard of Hohenzollern, confiding of 6000 cavalry. The French claim a victory; but it is evident that they gained no decisive advantage, for we find by the 20th bulletin, that they were forced to order Lauff to come up to support them. On the 27th, and in the 28th Bulletin it is stated, that Mura, and Bernadotte, are still in pursuit of Hohenzollern, who, after the affair at Zedhenich, took the road to Furienberg.—Whilst these three Generals are in pursuit of Hohenzollern, Soult is endeavouring to cut off the Duke of Weimar. The 21st Bulletin says, that the Duke of Weimar, on the 25th in crossing the Oder, had taken the Hamburg Mail, however, asserted, that he did not cross it till the 31st.—With respect to the Duke of Weimar's corps, the Mail brought accounts that he had taken position at Plauen and Gutrow, and it seems as if the Duke was retreating into Swedish Pomerania. The French are upon the Oder, but it does not appear that they have yet crossed it. The King of Prussia has passed the Vistula. It is said, that a letter from his Majesty was delivered to Buonaparte on the 27th, and of an Prussia has demanded peace. Talleyrand had there been ordered to repair to Berlin. The Elector of Hesse, whose neutrality Buonaparte had promised to respect, has experienced bad success. The French have taken possession of Cadix.

To the bulletins is added a proclamation of Buonaparte to the army, which is not yet received in this country, in which he declares to the officers and privates of his army, that the Prussians and Prussians are advancing. This appears to be an acknowledgment of the junction of the Prussians with the Prussian army. An account is given of a very hasty answer to the Duke of Brunswick, in consequence of his application in favour of his states. The resolution seems to be finally declared, of stripping this unfortunate prince of his dominions, who is accused by the French Emperor, as the cause of the war. The threat is renewed of making no peace with England, till she is deprived of all the means of again disturbing the peace of the Continent.

To judge from the bulletins, Buonaparte is not anxious for peace; and yet the minister Lucchiani has been treated with a degree of contempt, which does not augur much in favour of the success of the Emperor's professed disposition to favour the cessation of hostilities. It is stated, that the Emperor of Saxony is about to put the impregnable fortress of Koenigsberg into the possession of the French. It is likely one of the conditions which has procured this favourable treatment for his territories. There is not much conciliation in the intelligence from the South of Italy; but it is plain that the French are not quite at their ease in that quarter.

The Rifle of war, which arrived at Plymouth with dispatches from Constantine, brings intelligence that twelve sail of Spanish ships of the line were ready for sea at Cadix, and that several of them were embarked on board them; that another were ready for sea at Carthage, with troops embarked, amounting in the whole to 22,000. It was therefore presumed those squadrons are to form a junction and proceed to South America, to endeavour to re-capture the Spanish possessions there, and Duckworth are, however, closely watching their motions.
