SUMMARY OF POLITICS.

SUIMARY OF POLITICS.

The contents of the Dutch and Paris papers are interesting, if not important. Jerome Buonaparte, the new King of Westphalia, seems to have more of those, "compunetues visitings" with respect to the trade of his own subjects, which were so repeatedly manifested by his brother Louis. He has even gone farther than either of his brothers and has decreed that Feglish commodities and annufactures shall not only be seized, but burnt, The decree has also been extred into execution. Spain, whose sabmisine to France increases with the augmentation of the force which France its sent into Spain, has adopted the commercian to sent the sugmentation of the force which France its sent into Spain, has adopted the commerciant of the secently forbidden all French, Danish, or Dutch vessels to rail from Spanish ports, lest they should be captured by the British.

An article dated from Amsterdam makes a pompous display of our terrors, and of the power and means of France—"We begin afterally according to this Datch Declaimer, "to tremble—we begin to be consumed that the plan of marching to India seasy of execution—and that our exclusion from the continent has been effected."—The pompous and terrific nature of this exodium induced us to expect that measures of the greatest magnitude would in the separal or the conclusion be announced against us—that the peroration would have unfolded the intention of the enemy "to bring forth from their hickens kennels and let loose upon us in all their furry, in famine, fever, plague, and death, those impatient dogs of war, whose fierce regards afflight even the Minister of venegance that feeds them." But we were mistaken, an avordium of such force and promise is merely the prelude to the announcing the capture of a small vessel of ours by a Dutch privateer!

We find it positively stated, that towards the latter end of January, hostilities were resurred in Calabria, by a small detabement of the Enolish

Thomas Bridgman and Henry Bridgman, chared on stopic doctors to expect that measures of the greatest magnitude would in the sequel or the conclusion be amounced against us—that the peroration would have unfolded the intention of the enemy "to bring forth from their hickous kennels and let loose upon us in all their from their hickous kennels and let loose upon us in all their from, in famine, fever, plague, and death, those impatient dogs of war, whose there ergards afflight even the Minister of vent gennec that feeds them." But we were mistaken an evordum of such force and promise is merely the preludic to the announcing the capture of a small vested of ours by a Dattch privateer!!

We find it postively stated, that towards the latter end of January, hostilities were remured in Calabria, by a small detachment of the English army in Sicily, passing over, and assailing the meanering enemy on their own shore. Our small force engaged in the enterprize, including what the Naples Moniteur terms banditti, are represented as consisting of only 600 men, which the enemy, as usual, boast of having defeated; "part (say they) endeavoured to regain their vessels, by swimming the remainder were made prisoners." Notwithstanding this boast, however, we find that near a week after a far greater English force than that showe stated, was in possession of Reggio, which it lads streounded with entrenchments. Of this place the enemy stated themseives masters on the last of February, and on the following day the fort surcendered, with 900 prisoners, and fourteen pieces of cannon. Such is the enemy's statement of transactions, respecting which no other accounts have yet reached England. That they will prove to bave greatly exaggerated, if not altogether mis-represented the facts, experience has led us to entertain not the smallest doubt. The first mention made by the enemy of the glorious and ever memorable battle of Maida was in terms nearly smaller; and we are not without sanguine hope.

That these two powers are oltimately destined to "got the way of all flesh," to fall into the ranks of continental slavery, we are firmly persuaded; but we question whether, we are firmly persuaded; but we question whether, we are firmly persuaded; but would, we should thought then at the same time. It would, we should thought be list in purpose better to take each in its turn. We believe he is not quite pleased with the turn, we believe he is not quite pleased with the turn, which is the reluctance sich has been in what possible cause of dissatisfaction can be have against the Emperor Alexander? Has he not done every thing that France has required? The kings of Wirtemberg or Bavaria could not possibly have manifested a spirit of more perfect obedience.

Orders have been issued by the Admiralty for two sail of the line, five frigates, a bomb, and four gun-brigs, immediately to take on board a quantity of ordnance stores of different descriptions, at Portsmouth, and to sail for the Baltic. There are eighty sail of transports in that harbour nearly ready for sex.
