In the House of Commons last night the Speaker, after soliciting like particular attention of the flower stated in the following terms his lawing records and the following terms has lawing results that the following terms has lawing records a letter from the Duke of York:—

Speaker of the House of Commons."
Speaker put the question, that this letter do litable, which was agreed to.

an the tables which was agreed to.

It was reported in the City on Wednesday, that insurrections had broken out in several parts of the United States, in consequence of the execution of the new Acts for more strictly enforcing the Embargoot The Collector of the Customs at New York is stated to have resigned, and the troops employed our the batteries, it is added, have refused to irre on the ships which attempt to violate the Embargo. This intelligence, we understand, in contained in letters from New York dated the 20th U.

SUMMARY OF POLITICS.

As interesting report has been brought by ssengers from Heligoland, Accounts had reached had left Paris, to put himself at the head of the are persuaded; but we do not apprehend that the preparations of the former are yet sufficiently ma-tured to justify an immediate explosion. Besides, we have Dutch papers to the 10th, which are silent respecting Napoleon's departure from Paris, though it is said to have taken place on the 1st instent. The mere circumstance, however, of the Despot's return from Spain, which is not half sub-dued, is decisive with us that he does not implicitly rely on the pacific professions of Austria.

The letters received by the last arrivals from Spain and Portugal are extremely at variance. An account from Valencia, of the date of January 21, mentioning the affair of the defeat and cap of the Duke del Infantado's advanced guard, con cludes as follows :- " The French General Moncey with a division of 18,000 men, has reached Cuence and will probably direct his march to this place The French have also 15,000 men before Tarra gona. You may judge from this of our presen that the Marquis de la Romana had effected a junction with General Cuesta in Estremadura, and that their united forces had defeated a French division in that quarter.

These reports rest, it may be said, on no certain foundation. But the want of any authentic intelligence from the Continent creates, at the present day, no sensation in the public mind. An Inquiry, day, no sensation in the public mund. An Inquiry, in all its bearings, as far as they relate to our military welfare, or we may even say, existence, of the utmost importance, has absorbed every other political consideration. This Inquiry, however interested men may have attempted to stifle it in its birth, and in every subsequent process of its growth, bids fair to defeat the cunning and male-planning of its concept of the well as of fix one networks. olence of its concealed as well as of its open ene As the investigation now draws to a close k with increased anxiety to the course o proceeding which the House of Commons may re solve to adopt. The circumstance of Mrs. Clarke's having received money for procuring commissions, no one denies. She asserts that the Duke of York was privy to it, and (as we conceive) by sufficien evidence substantiates that assertion. As for Mrs. Clarke, such as her assuming false names, and having called herself a widow, these are im-moralities growing necessarily out of her mode of lie, and serve not in the slightest degree to invali date the material part of her testimony. That testimony has been uniformly given under every pressure of discouragement, and yet (not excepting these trifling inconsistencies which have just been accounted for), will be found as free from the charge or), will be found as free from the charg rents. We fear not contradiction, when we assert this "royal combat," which both learned and honourable gentlemen could bestow. And yet, the evidence adduced in opposition to that of Mrs. evidence adduced in opposition to that of Mrs. Clarke, has tended only to weaken the cause it was meant to support. With respect to the mode of examination, and the content exhibited throughout towards the party accusing, we could say much, but on a subject which will admit of little, if any, difference of opinion, we forbest to comment.— Thus far, however, we hazard our opinion, and we think that the majority of our readers, and of the people of this country at large, will unite with us in it; that let the result of the matter be what it will, from the nature of the evidence already bewill, from the nature of the evidence already be-fore us, the greatest praise is due to the homourable author of the motion, Colonel Wardle. Against all inquiries of this sort, and against the discovery of peculation in gerieral, we well know that Place-son and Pensioners will elways lend their decided opposition. That abuses to a very alarming extend do exist in various departments of the state, and that those abuses do imperiously call for reform, few will now be hardy enough to deny, and none able to confute. But, alas! Politics as well as Religion has its Pharisees, and what they cannot configon has its Plantses, and wait they cannot fitte by reisoning, they will overbear by clamour. They are prepared to hate a system by which themselves stand condemned; and, therefore, the enemy of abuses and peculiation, according to the immemorial tenor of their creed, " is yet mad, and has a devil." Still, however, we venture to predict that the Inquiry now before the House of Commons must ultimately lead to consequences most beneficial to the army, and to the public; whilst its introduction, and the subsequent proceedings reflect throughout true honour on Col. Wardle, and the small, but increasing number of his associates With respect to the final result of this Inquiry, we can only state the rumour of the day, which says that the office of Commander in Chief will be pu can only into commission, as was wisely done in the navy And a comparison between the services of the two departments leads us to hope sincerely that two departments leads us to hope sincerely that this rumour may prove true.

Since writing the above we rejoice to lay before our renders a letter from the Duke of York to the Speaker of the House of Commons, in which, with an open and hold avowal of his innocence, he de-mands a trial, provided that satembly should not clear him from the guilt of the disgraceful charges clear bim from the guilt of the disgraceful charges which have been alleged against bim. We highly approve of this proceeding. At all events it shews that the motion of Col. Wardle was by no means premature or unnecessary, and it proves what we have before asserted, that the highest praise is due to that gentleman for his manly conduct throughthe that the highest praise is due to that gentleman for his manly conduct through the processor when whole affair, and his perseverance out the threatened with infany for his exertions in a task as unpleasant as it is meritorious.
