ON VISITING THE TOMB OF ______.

Suth Juse, 1822.

Companion now of years gone by,
Adleu! adieu! to thee—
Tin new forget thee till die—
Ob, no! that one thee,
Still I'll repair to thy grave,
While years may hast with the;
I may not very many have,
Ere I shall follow thee.
I must go 'er thy cold clay bed,
I feel a painless pain—
And pleasures whichlong since were dead,
Turn here to life again.

Oft have I cull'd carnations gay, Sweet nectars off the tree— As thro' you verdant fields I stray'd In company with thee.

But now we'll plant around thy head, And o'er this turfy mound, A wreath of roses which shall spread Perfoming fragrance round. And still will come each waning year. To see these garlands thrive; W. Stall keep them still alive.

Will prince them, non my will prince them, still alive. Stall keep them still alive. Stall keep them still alive. Shall constant vigils keep—K. Shall constant vigils keep—K. Shall constant vigils keep—K. Shall constant vigils keep—K. The pred, sweet Angelina, rest, Thy memory is dear; sleeping dust, its sweetly slumbering here. I'll bid you nightingale to sing. In sweet and moornful strain, but another year shall bring with here again. Until another year shall bring Thy Julia here again.
