In confequence of the alarming intelligence received from Ireland, his Majefly came to town yellerday afternoon from Windfor. A Cabinet Council was inmediately held at Lord Pelham's Office, which was attended by all the Minifers. The refult was laid before the King at Buckingham House by the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and his Majefly figned the following Message to Parliament, which was immediately perfected to both House :—

"His Majesty feels the deepest regret in acquainting the House of Commons, that a treasonable and rebellious spirit of Insurrection has manifested itself in ireland, which has been marked by circumstances of peculiar atrocity in the City of Dublin. His Majesty feels with perfect confidence on the wisdom of his Parliament, that such the wisdom of his Parliament, that such a such a such as a such as a calculated to assert of the transition of and security to his Majesty's loyal subjects in that a part of the United Kingdom, and to restore an appropriate of the United Kingdom, and to restore an agreed to by the Lords without any debate; but in the Cumons an interesting conversation took in the Cumons an interesting conversation took in the Cumons and establishing Martial Law in Ireland, both of which were passed, and the most proper and vigorous measures have been ordered to preferve that unhappy country from becoming a prey to rebellion, anarchy, and bloodsted.

The Insurection in Dublin appears to be of a description still more ferious and alaming than the first accounts represented.
